Without installation, this is a driver. Q: Generate random number only for specific value in MySQL Is there a way I could generate a random number value for only specific values only without deleting it.

Basically, I want to have 2 random values for ID but only one of the values could be equal to a specific value. $random_id_1 = rand(1,1000); $random_id_2 = rand(1,1000); if ($random_id_2 = 1) { //do stuff } A: $random_id_1 = rand(1,1000); $random_id_2 = rand(1,1000); if ($random_id_2 == 1) { $random_id_1 = rand(1,1000); // do stuff } The time has come to go dark and unplug, particularly in the wake of the worst mass shooting in this nation's history. Students in school districts around the country have recently announced that they will go dark on November 18, the day after Election Day, in an act of solidarity with the victims of the Las Vegas massacre. Students in California and Illinois have taken the lead, and more than 30 schools in the Los Angeles Unified School District recently joined them. The practice of students going dark has been gaining momentum in recent years, as young people feel increasing frustration with politicians who appear uninterested in their long-term future. College students have been going dark for years, as new groups have sprung up to address the needs of these young adults. Now the high school and middle school set has been joining the cause. Their reasoning is fairly obvious: they can't vote, but they can make a statement. It's easy to dismiss these protests. After all, students are not a monolithic bloc of people; it's likely that many of those who took part in the protests will not vote for Donald Trump, or any other politician who is part of the problem. It's also true that some students go dark for a particular reason: to force their teachers to address the issues that are not being addressed by that class's faculty. It's also worth remembering that going dark means 3e33713323
