In the first study since 2016, the European Commission's judiciary observatory (OBS) noted that confidence in the European court of justice (ECJ) and in the court system as a whole has fallen sharply in many countries. Observatory director Wolfgang Pangrazio says the reasons behind the decline are manifold, but "one of the most immediate reasons" for the lack of faith is the recent scandal involving two UK judges, who took a trip to the Vatican with ex-chief Brexit negotiator David Davis. The OBS found that trust in the judiciary has "significantly declined". In four countries, the percentage of people who said they trust the judiciary has dropped by 20 percentage points or more since 2016. In the UK, confidence in the judiciary as a whole has fallen by 10 percentage points. More than half of the respondents (52%) said they did not trust judges in general, a significant increase compared to 2016. The survey also showed that people are more likely to mistrust the judiciary than they were to trust the media and business (28% and 32%). The study showed that trust in the judiciary in the UK has remained at a low level for more than 10 years and has fallen in all three areas: overall, in the courts, and in the independence of the judiciary. Meanwhile, those who said they trusted the media has risen. Another important finding of the study is the good or bad reaction to corruption cases. According to the results of the survey conducted on 20 March, in eight out of the 11 countries where the respondents were asked to choose, there was a difference between how people would like to see a corruption case handled (8% think that such a case should not be handled at all), compared with how they would react if it was being handled by someone else (23%). There are also divides within the European public. The results suggest that the issue is more pressing in some countries, according to Pangrazio, than others. In France, people actually trust the judiciary more than the media.
