Invention This invention relates to a container mounting and retaining device and is more particularly concerned with a clamping apparatus adapted to releasably, detachably and removably mount an upper shell on a lower shell to form a double-wall container for receiving a product. 2. Description of the Prior Art In the use of double-wall containers, a problem which is not infrequently encountered is that a user encounters difficulty in detachably mounting one double-wall container shell to the other double-wall container shell in the formation of a double-wall container. Specifically, it is frequently difficult to provide a detent on one shell such that the detent will engage a mating recess in the other shell when the shells are in the assembled condition. Likewise, difficulties are also often encountered in providing a means for maintaining the shells in the assembled condition during the handling of the container and in maintaining the package in an erected condition during shipment and handling. Thus, it is an object of the present invention to provide a clamping apparatus adapted to releasably, detachably and removably mount an upper shell to a lower shell to form a double-wall container. Another object of the present invention is to provide a clamping apparatus adapted to provide a detent on one shell in engagement with a mating recess on the other shell to form a double-wall container. Yet another object of the present invention is to provide a clamping apparatus adapted to maintain the shells together to form a double-wall container in an erected condition, and also to maintain the shells together in the erected condition during handling and shipping.

Q: Detouring over Listbox items loses focus I have a System.Windows.Forms.ListBox control over which I wish to apply a functionality similar to the one described in Microsoft blog post "Detours: How to modify or replace a native control's behavior without modifying its source code".

The only problem is that after initializing the ListBox, Focus is set off and never sets back on the ListBox control. Is there any way to restore the focus? A: The listbox uses a listview to do 0cc13bf012
